EDITOR IN DISTRESS

A lot of us are having hard times right now. I've been saving every penny and nickle I find in a coffee can to cash in when ever it fills up. Sometimes I have to cash them in when the cans only half full. I finally even pawned my guitar for the first time. I've being doing my best to cut cost down. I usually only drink at home; Natty Lite and Kentucky Deluxe. I still tip the ladies at the strip club, but no more table dances. I shop at the 99 Cent store. It amzing how much of a selection they got. I try to wear my pants a few days in a row, but all this raining dirties them up quick. Luckily for us Nick Rizos at Rizos Wash is allowing his customers and neighbors free use of his state-of-the-art washers every Thursday evening from 6-10pm. Why is Nick Rizos doing this? Here's what he had to say:

"We know some of our neighbors are having a tough time in this economy," Rizos said. "This is something that can really make a difference and raise people's spirits at the same time."

Rizos said he has seen some down-on-their-luck customers lug jars and tubs of pennies into the laundromat just to wash their clothes. "Nobody should have to go through that," he said. "So we're going to do our part to help."

Did you watch UFC 104 last weekend? I did and there were some awesome fights, minus Machida versus Rua. It was pretty slow and I'm disappointed that Machida didn't destroy Shogun. I thought it was pretty even. Rua slowed down at the end and that probably lost him the last round. It was a good strategy to kick the legs of Machida and take away his quickness, but Rua didn't really do enough to win. I thought. I'm pretty sure Machida versus Rua II will be much better.

Are you ready for Halloween? I'm not. I have no idea what to dress as. I'm pretty lame this time of year. Most of our clients are throwing Halloween parties this Saturday. Silver City Cabaret is doing a murder mystery thing Thursday. That sounds pretty cool. There tons of bar and club parties. I might just party Friday and chill on Saturday.

Have you been to Bombshells Cabaret lately? They have these new $2 dollar dance specials between 9 and 11pm. Basically the DJ annouces $2 dance time and the girls dance for you for 30 seconds. It's a pretty awesome way to check out a bunch of girls for a cheap price. I have to save my new favorite dancer there is Savannah. I gotta say thanks to my man Doug for the free dances and beer. You rule!

Happy Halloween! Bring me tricks and treats! -Gil

Get Up, Stand Up

Last week I made my stand up comedy debut at The Improv in Addison. It was one of those things that I had always wanted to do. Hosting a talk radio show for a living, I have always been fascinated by the art of stand up comedy, as much for its' arrangement as for its' content. I have made it a point to see some of my favorite comedians on consecutive nights to watch the way that they take repeated segments of their show and moved them around in their set, like pieces on a chessboard. That is the part for which I have always been able to draw a parallel between the two disciplines. The part that I experienced on stage at The Improv was completely new territory.

Sometimes it takes an outside inspiration to get things going, and for this, my catalyst was one half of The Pugs And Kelly midday show. Heard 1-4pm weekdays on my own AM 1360, Pugs had come up with the idea that he, Kelly, my producer Mike Turley, and myself should each do five minutes of stand up to start the show that was being headlined by Al Madrigal and supported by Paul Varghese. The Improv was making it "1360 AM Night", and Pugs was looking for something special to help promote the event. In typical Pugs fashion, he had gotten this big idea and then had already started to second-guess it by the time that I was made aware. I definitely shared his apprehension. Failing at stand up comedy seems to be about the worst kind of way to fail in show business. For example, if I tell you that I can do a hundred pushups and then crap out at around sixty, I'll get some grief, but it won't be the end of the world. However, when you are not funny, you are so not funny. It's just you, a microphone and a spotlight. You might as well be naked.

I timed my act at about four and half minutes, and I rehearsed it until I had the whole thing memorized. We drew numbers for the order, and I went up first. MC John Tole kicked it off, which meant that I had to follow a professional. My entire act was based on a bit that I had written about children being too much like PCs and not enough like Mac computers (an early draft of which appeared in this column last week). If the crowd wasn't down with technology, this was going to be a long five minutes.

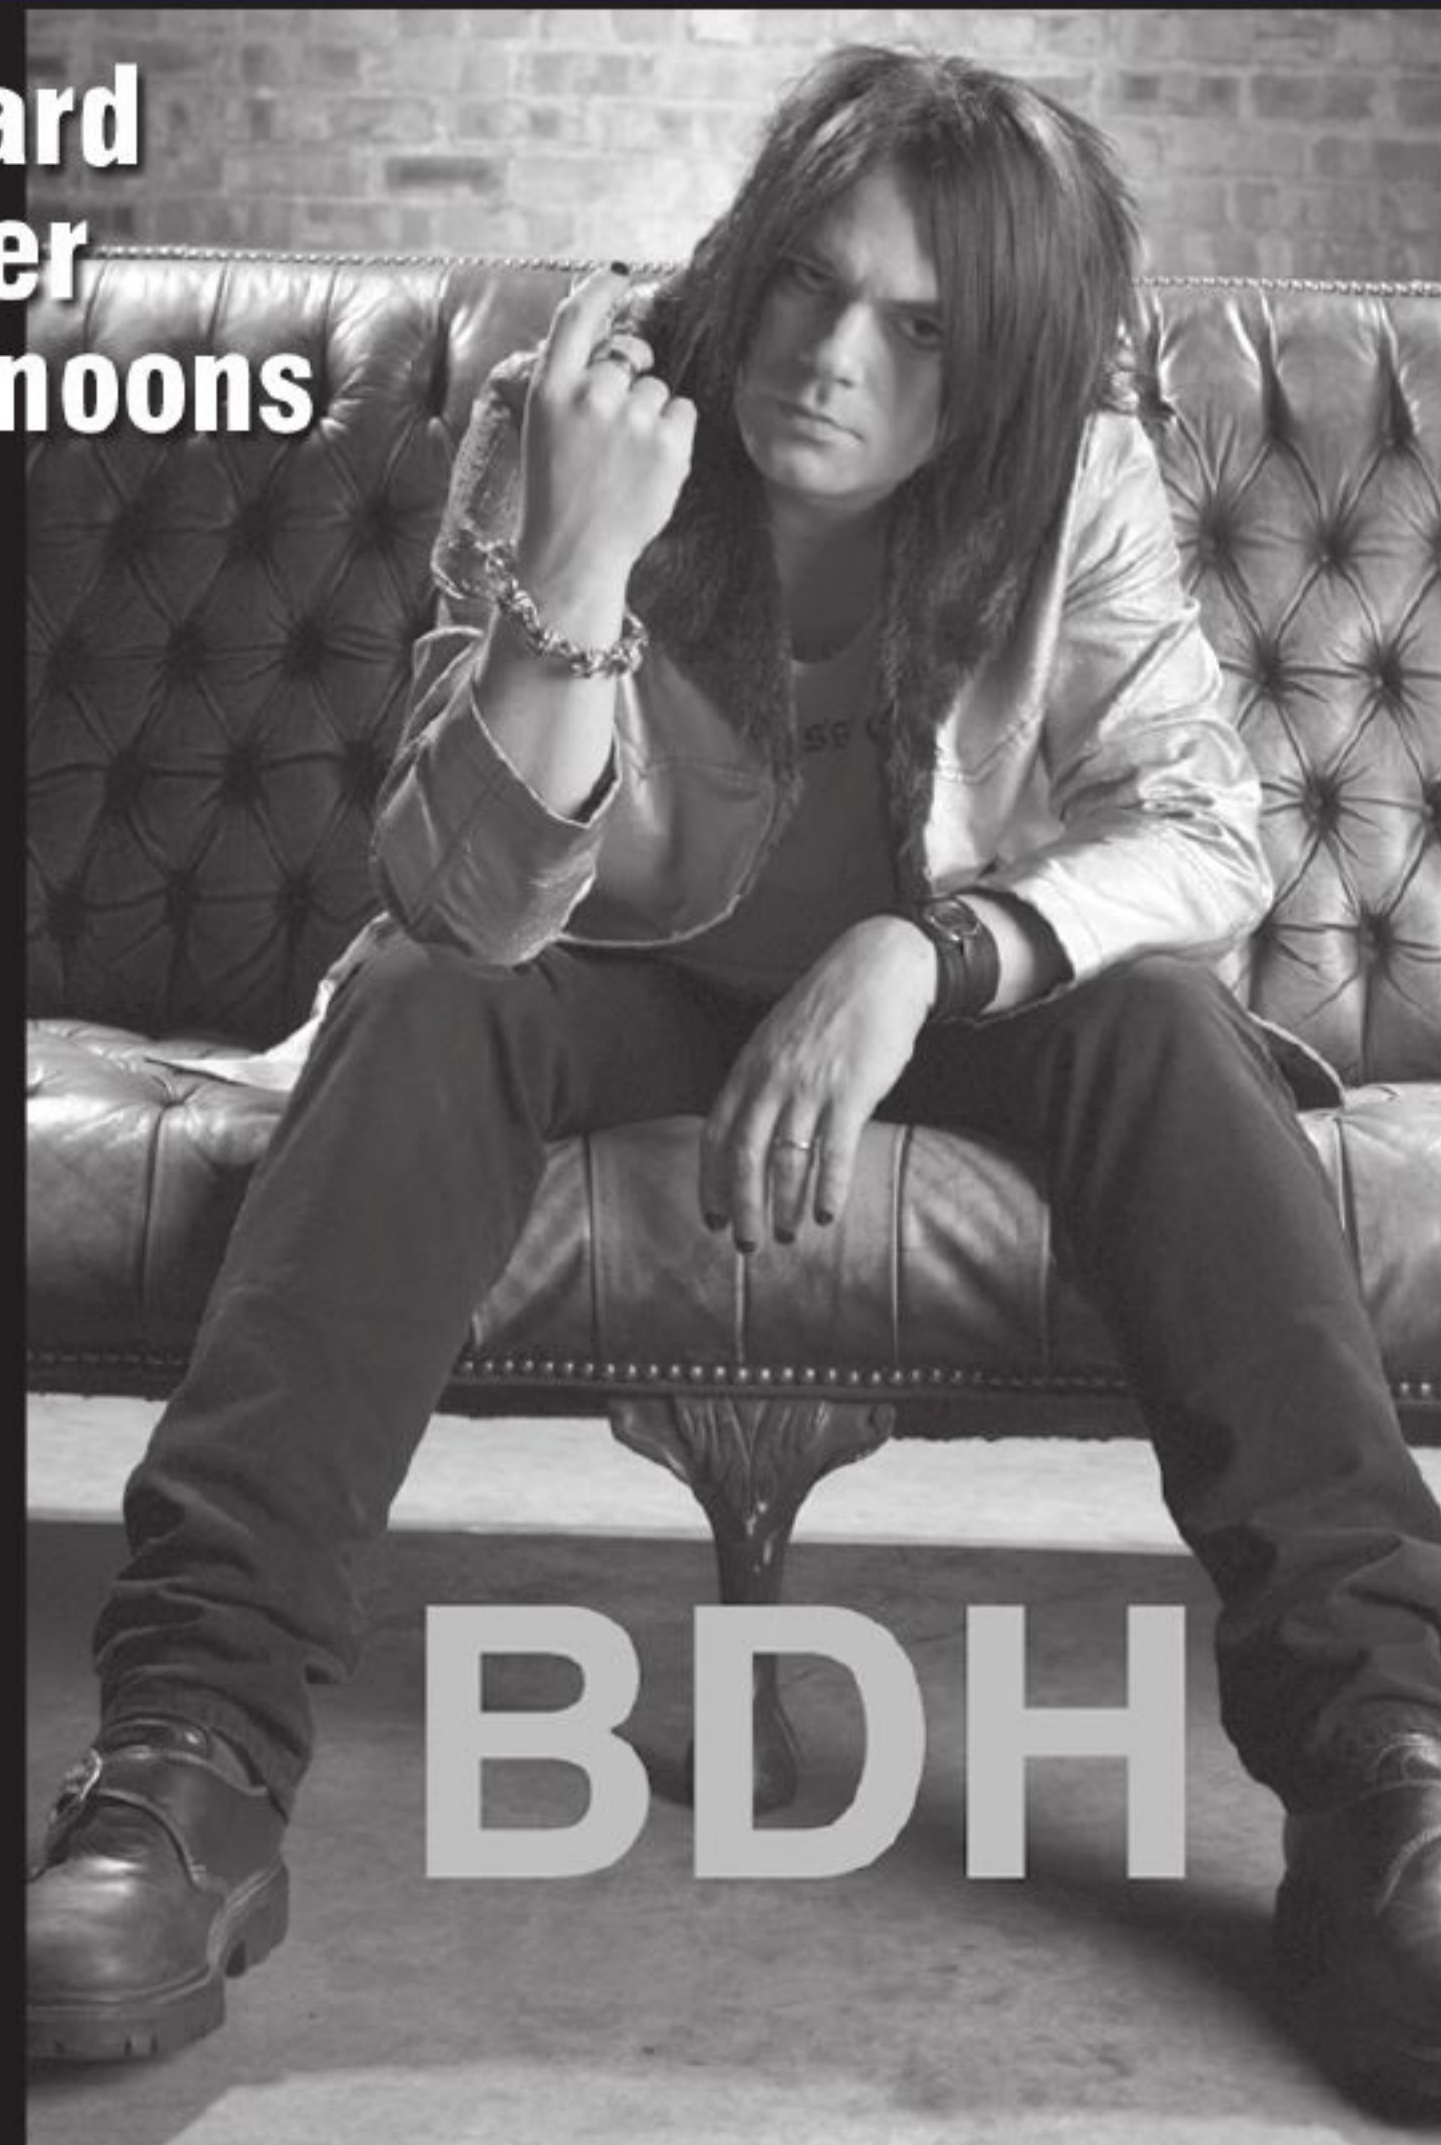

Fortunately they were, and there were a lot of them. The AM 1360 listeners filled the house, and they came ready to laugh. Not only did they laugh at me, they laughed at all of us. With time allowed for laughter, everyone's set was much closer to ten minutes. Pugs and Kelly were great, and producer Mike Turley said the word "pussy" thirteen times in a ninety second span. We definitely didn't suck.

I would really suggest everyone trying this at some point. It's like a twelve step experience (or so I've heard). Whether you kill or you bomb, you definitely get a new appreciation for what comedians do.

Headliner Al Madrigal gave me some really positive feedback, and told me that I should keep doing this. I think I have found my next thing to get busy failing at.

Your BOSS never

Last Thursday, my bf Brigitte Kicks asked if I wanted to go to Winstar to see Roger Daltrey. She said she would pay for my ticket. Since we haven't hung out since she had surgery to correct her "Slayer neck" (seriously, those dudes need to send her flowers for all those years of loyal headbanging that messed up her discs!), I was game.

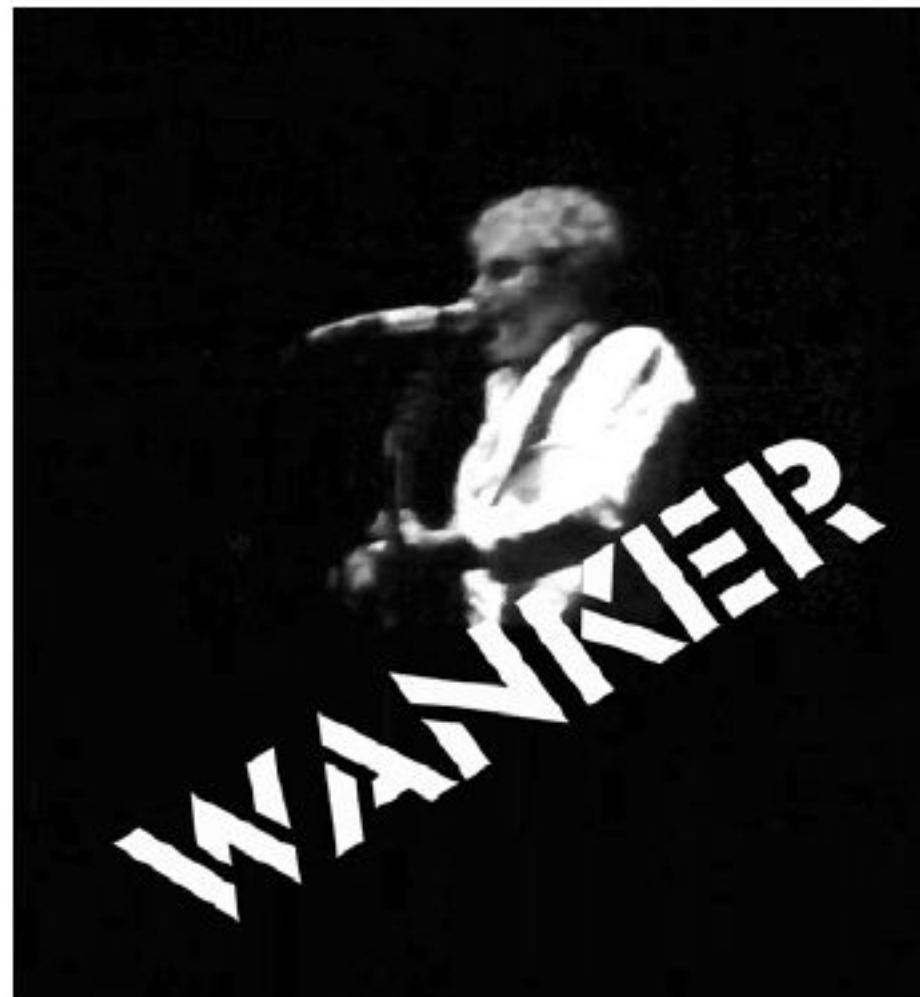

She got 13th row tix, which the chick on the phone told her were better than VIP. We got to the casino, split a room, and then went down to get a bite to eat. The food was expensive at The Grill. We didn't stuff ourselves knowing that, if we did, we wouldn't be able to get the proper buzz on.

Unlucky for me that the luck I had the first time I gambled with her in NOLA didn't repeat itself... and then it was showtime!

The showroom holds 2,500 bodies, but it appeared that our 13th row seats were like at the back of the crowd! It looked like maybe 500 people were there. Spoiled rock sluts we are, we tried to move up front. The set began, and there were a couple seconds of feedback. Mr. Daltrey was pissed. Throughout the show, he complained about the sound, about the air blowing right on him, but his voice was shot from the get go. One of the highlights was Simon Townsend, Pete's brother, who kicked ass on a solo song excursion.

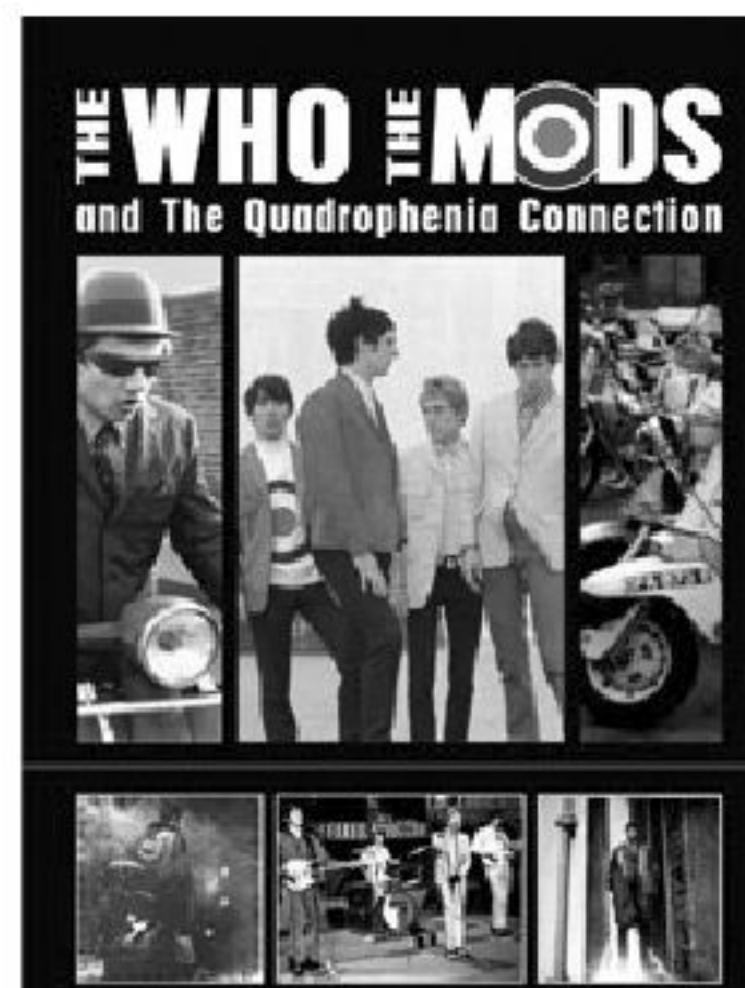

There were tons of empty seats but security wouldn't let us take advantage of this fact. I even tried bribery, but the woman said no (probably would have worked if she would have been a he). We got a bored and went to lose a little more moola and went back in for the end. A little more feedback and that was all it took-- Daltrey threw a shitfit, reiterated his earlier complaints, and that was that.

What a WANKER!

Critics... everyone's a critic, right? And critics can be wankers. So, speaking of wankers, Clint from MVD sent me a DVD called The Who, The Mods and The Quadrophenia Connection. It's a great history lesson about how The Who were labelled Mods, and then learned to not dress like a bunch of pansies and learned to rock harder. Ok, not exactly... it is about how their music evolved, thanks to Pete Townsend, and I learned more about Quadrophenia than I will retain. The best parts are where The Who are performing, and the worst are when pompous critics gloriously expound upon what they think were in the minds of Mr. T... (not the black dude). Can you say "SUPERWANKER?"

I knew you could.

Stripper Arrested for Stabbing Woman with Stiletto Heels

Being a stripper today is no easy job. Just ask the poor exotic dancer who, on her first day at the office, was stabbed by a co-worker with a pair of razor sharp stiletto heels.

Her attacker, 22 year-old Chetania Davis, went berserk on the poor woman's face after an apparent argument. The victim, a 52 year-old noobie to the Ohio nightclub, suffered wounds that would require seven staples in her face.

According to police, Davis went psycho on the newcomer because she felt the club didn't need anymore dancers. Her lawyer, of course, says she was merely acting in self-defense.

Yahoo Lap Dancers Make Wrong Moves

Yahoo has apologized for its use of scantily clad lap dancers to entertain mainly male software developers and engineers in Taiwan last weekend. The Internet search company Monday acknowledged its politically incorrect step.

"I wanted to acknowledge the public reaction generated by the images of female dancers at our Taiwan Open Hack Day this past weekend," said Chris Yeh of Yahoo's Development Network on the company's blog.

"Our hack events are designed to give developers an opportunity to learn about our ... (programming) and technologies. As many folks have rightly pointed out, the 'Hack Girls' aspect of our Taiwan Hack Day is not reflective of that spirit or purpose. And it's certainly not the message we want to send about our values here at Yahoo! Hack Days are about making everyone feel welcome, including women coders and technologists."

Couple Gets Married in Strip Club

A British couple has become the first in the country to get married at a strip club. Phil Wharam, 50, and his bride Lynfa Lawson, 46, said "I do" before 120 guests at Katz Gentleman Club in Basildon, Essex, in the UK.

Katz applied for license to hold weddings at its venue in August after Wharam and Lawson fell in love there. Kayne said he believes he's filling a need in the marketplace.

"We are just making use of our very good facilities," said manager Dean Kayne. "What we are trying to do here is change people's blinkered view of our establishment,"

BARKIN' OUT LOUD

by Pat "Two Dogs" Snow

nouncement ONLY says its ok for professional athletes if used for healing injuries and administered by a licensed physician, but therein lies the rub. Where cheaters are concerned if you give them an inch they'll take a syringe.

Do I think that athletes should be able to be allowed the same medical treatment a normal (do we have any of those?) citizens is allowed? Yes, I do. An individual's life and health needs to be a priority.

Is it possible to devise a program that could effectively treat athletes with steroids? On a short term scale, NO. Where Joe Citizen might get a steroid injection or small series to deal with a problem, and go back to work, this is where the athlete would have been given a body enhancement.

Could a long term program be devised? Possibly, like for season ending injuries where steroids are only given in the beginning to stimulate system healing, then the remainder is physical therapy.

Professional athletes need access to appropriate medical treatment, which could and should include steroids IF necessary, but devising a profile is one thing, maintaining integrity of that is quite another.

You better be ready for a team of goblins, orcs, trolls, necromancers, and evil wizards on the eve of Halloween, and yes I'm talking about the Mavericks. They got the late game (9:30) at the Lakers on Friday night. What's scary about this? In the post-game interviews, don't let them be talkin' about how this group collected in the off season is "still a work in progress". No, what you see against the Lakers is what you're gonna see all season against top teams. Brrrrrrr.

And just to add some worms to your plate of bat tails, let's talk about how TV proponents are forcefully pushing to get instant replay more a part of baseball.

Ridiculous. Sports are games played by humans and refereed by humans, and errors from both groups are bound to occur. And calls have a natural tendency to balance out over the course of a game, good or bad.

Some officials or their whole crew have a tendency to call more or less fouls than other crews. Is it because they're better or worse? Not unless you include attitude in that picture. Yeah, some officials call less fouls because they want players to control the result of the game, others are stickler for rules. Guess what, have you ever heard of an official being "talked to" by the league after a game about a non call? Nope. Only those calls that were made and deemed egregious.

Who wants more instant replay? The broadcast media. Both the owners, like ESPN, and broadcasters. Why? It gives THEM visibility and inserts THEM into the game for the public to relate to.

Monday Night Football was ingrained in the public's mind in its first couple of decades NOT for being intrusive into the game but because its broadcast trio of Gifford, Cosell, and Meredith were such a great on air balance of personalities. Great game or lame game, these guys made the game more personable to the viewers. Gifford provided play call, Meredith the humor and game insight, and Cosell the antagonist.

Let's keep the human element alive in the games, which includes players and ref's making the "very seldom" mistake, and keep instant replay as an official override to on field decisions OUT OF IT.

Let's wash all this down with a milkshake of witches brew, the NCAA.

Yep, men's college football this season has been mostly dull. Pretty unusual for college football, and regardless of how it's being hyped, the biggest percentages of games are lackluster. I don't view this as a systemic problem, just a normal cycle of events. Do I think there's another, bigger problem with men's football? Yep.

I think alumni fans in increasingly larger numbers have been turning the channel away on game day and a big reason for that is the BCS rankings. Universities, coaches, and media are paying absolutely zero attention that the majority of people want a playoff system. This three headed monster of a ranking system with two polls and a freaking computer is an absurdity.

Let's get some NFL action going on, like pounce on last week's games.

Which teams do you now believe compete for worst ownership, management, and player personnel in the league? It used to just be Detroit and they had their own tricked out cellar to play in. Now we can add Oakland, Cleveland, Buffalo, Kansas City, Washington, Tampa, Seattle, Carolina, and St Louis. These teams are added for their longevity to the failure list even though they might have had a hiccup of one good season.

Yes we also have to look at teams knocking on the cellar door, like Miami and Chicago but they're gonna ruin their chances by turning things around next year.

I don't care what team you might have picked for him, Mangini is a terrible head coach, and when chosen by the Browns that was the disaster karma waiting to donkey kick their heads in. The Panthers ownership is not exotically wacko

Well aren't ya'll just havin' a fine 'ol week of fun! October's just comin' to a close and you been thinkin' maybe Halloween's already done hit the Metroplex like a ton of Rollo's. Don't you be bankin' on that 'cause we got some murky business in the shadow's just awaitin' to jump out at you. Let's head on down the back alleys and see what we can scare up.

How about finding some good news that you don't wanna give the Cowboys so's they don't let it get in their heads. Like the rest of the schedule is favorable to the 'Boys weather wise. Mostly.

Yep. November 8 we're at Philly and November 15 at the Packers but those should be ok, and the only two after that are at the Giants December 6 and at the Redskins December 27. The Washington game might be a bear to end the season on because it's a night game and that oughta be cold. Other than that, we're either at home or in non Yankee territory.

We got the Seahawks comin' to town. We need a condensed version of their condition so hows about this: you ever see a chicken floppin' around on the ground with its head cut off? THAT'S what the condition of Seattle is. What's scary about that? The 'Boys have just won back to backs for the first time in several hundred years and we don't want them to get a false sense of confidence or security.

Mark Cuban's costume for Halloween has turned out to be the real live boogey man. He's now advocating steroids. Yes, his public an-like Oakland and the Redskins, but they either have no real interest in the team or they have absolutely low scale decision making sense. Retaining Fox as coach and giving Delhomme a huge contract extension oughta make the record book for dumb decisions.

I actually have great expectations for Kansas City and St Louis for the future, as represented by coaching and personnel hires before the start of this season. It's going to take some time to reboot these clubs, but they definitely got guys who can do it. Both Miami and Chicago are going to have a significantly better next year.

I liked the 49er's comeback against the Texans. That was a tough game, Houston's for sure playing better ball, and San Fran's continuing to find out it needs QB help.

NFL Week 8

Bye week teams: Bengals, Chiefs, Patriots, Steelers, Buc's, and Redskins.

Sunday Noon Games

Two for the dumpster: Rams (0-7) at Lions (1-5, home 1-2), and Browns (1-6, road 1-3) at Bears (3-3, home 2-0). If this is all that's broadcast to you, start on major depression medication.

Two that will be of local excitement but not national thrillers: Seahawks (2-4, road 0-2) at Cowboys (4-2, home 2-1), and Giants (5-2, road 3-1) at Eagles (3-2, home 2-1). I hope we can get all the feathers out of the stadium before the next game. New York's just gonna try and get outta there alive.

Have all your grilling done just before game time and get ready for some damn good football. Two undefeated teams with two very possible upsets: Broncos (6-0, road 3-0) at Ravens (3-3, home 2-1), and 49er's (3-3, road 1-2) at Colts (6-0, home 2-0).

3 O'Clock Games

Out of four games you got three with the ugly baby syndrome: only a mama could love 'em. If you have any chance at all of getting the swine flu this season, watching any of these games outta do 'er.

Jag's (3-2, road 1-2) at Titans (0-6), Raiders (2-5, home 1-2) at Chargers (3-3, home 1-2), and Panthers (2-4, road 1-2) at Cardinals (4-2, home 1-2).

Here's the BIG GAME of the day: Vikings (6-1, road 3-1) at Packers (4-2, home 2-1). Just like the first game, this one's gonna have all them Yankee's just hypin' all over themselves. Packers coach McCarty is gonna have to take another approach with QB Aaron Rogers, like very aggressive if they have any chance of winning this game. The Vikes need to pound the ball and eat the clock.

Monday Night Football

This is THE BIGGER GAME of the day: Falcons (4-2, road 1-2) at Saints (6-0, home 3-0). You've got two teams that surprise from different angles in a major division matchup. New Orleans actually has a defense to go along with that neutron bomb of an offense, and Atlanta can play upper tier on both sides of the ball. You don't know if this is going to start off as a defensive contest like last week for both teams or if it's just gonna jump right to an aerial bombardment. Either way, this game'll put the hot sauce on your wings.

Readers Response:

Two Dogs:

Another fine article. Of course, I was interested in the question about sports movies. I can't believe you didn't chide Doug for talking about the "3 top vote getters" and then listing 4 movies. HOOSIERS was certainly a fine one. I would also nominate REMEMBER THE TITANS; THE EXPRESS; WE ARE MARSHALL. Of course, my very favorite, which is only partly about sports, is BREAKING AWAY. THE KARATE KID is a close second, but then that's just me. Hey, no mention of the Red River Shootout? I'm surprised...

Burt

Jacksonville

Burt:

For a movie to qualify as a sports movie it's just got to have more than a bare few minutes, so movies like Rocky and Rudy didn't qualify. For people who'd like to go back in time and change things, The Best of Times with Robin Williams is a great story of a high school game lost and years later the guy who dropped the ball getting the rematch. Again, not much game played, but still a fun story. The Red River Shootout was more like the race between two snails.

TD

Two Dogs:

This rainy weather just suits you to a tee because that's the only kind of friend you've been to the Cowboys. Just like all the other media jerks you're now jumping on their bandwagon. You couldn't give a fair report of the game if you tried. I've been a Cowboys fan forever and have stuck with them through it all, not like you so called reporters. None of you know what's really important with the team.

Zane

Mesquite

Zane:

I'm sorry but I've been sneezing from the cold I got getting all wet from riding in that open wagon with the other Dunderbolts. Guess I was just too stupid to come in from the rain. I can't speak for the others but being relevant is just way too taxing on my limited brain cells. Just for you I'd try to take a stab at guessing what's so important about this team, but I'd probably just cut myself so you just go ahead and know all that good stuff. Don't share it with the rest of us because I just love being in the dark.

TD

Two Dogs:

I know media have to be objective in their analysis of a game and teams, but don't you think you could be more fan friendly about the local teams? All you guys seem to do is find fault with everything. Let's encourage people to support their favorite local teams.

Conrad

Arlington

Conrad:

I'm assuming you want something more than, "bah humbug" here. As for the Rangers, I have suffered the enjoyment and reveled in their agonies for decades as obviously a visit to the ballpark has been like going to a torture chamber. Except for last season the Stars have always been about excitement. The Mavericks are like the great gal you just want to take to the dance, and right at the door you find she's nothing but a tease. And I'm thinking that an investigative reporter will someday find that Jerry Jones owns a major interest in an antacid company and does these things to boost sales. I want everybody not on food stamps to get season tickets. How's that, homeboy?

TD

Two Dogs:

Bret Favre is THE best Quarterback to play the game. He holds all the records and is will break the one's he's set. He should be allowed to enter the Hall of Fame right after he retires on a special exemption since he's THE face of the NFL.

Moran

Frisco

Moran:

I will agree that he's an above average QB, but you'll never get me to admit that he's great. Here's an example of who's great: Aikman, Bradshaw, and Montana. None of those guys have the great stats but EACH of them has THREE Super Bowl Rings. Favre has only one ring, which is quite an accomplishment, but it's not anywhere near what those three did.

TD

Two Dogs:

On your list of what's a sport, what about beach volleyball?

Quinton

Mesquite

Quinton:

Not the guys, but anytime you got girls in bikini's jumping up and down, yeah, let me bring a cooler and I'd watch it all day long. Ok, no, I don't really, not beach, but school teams, yeah.

The $1.5 Million Bullet-Proof SUV (But That's Cheap Compared To The Vodka That Comes With It) and contains a diamond-encrusted replica of the Russian Imperial Eagle.

This is the world's most expensive SUV - but with three bottles of the world's most expensive vodka included in the price tag, it actually appears to be a bargain.

And finally, the bottle itself is made of bulletproof glass 30cm thick - just in case.

The car - and vodka - were produced especially for the mega-exclusive Top Marques luxury motor show in Monaco next year.

The $1.5 million Dartz Prombron Monaco Red Diamond Edition has gold-plated windows, pure tungsten exhausts, and the speed gauges are encrusted in diamonds.

The seats are not for the squeamish. They are made of one of the softest materials around - leather from a whale's penis.

The car is made by the company that produced armoured vehicles for Vladimir Lenin, Leon Trotsky, and Tsar Nicolas.

And, just to send the bling factor right through the roof, this SUV also comes complete with an exterior bulletproof Kevlar coating.

'It is inspired by the original playboy Aristotle Onassis' yacht Christina O, which had bar stool seats made from sperm whale foreskin.

But that's nothing compared to the vodka that comes with it.

'Some people have called us crazy because of this, but we think we must make a luxury car till the end.'

The car company has thrown three bottles of Russo-Baltique, the vodka brand it created this year to mark its 100th anniversary, Motor Authority reported.

Weighing four tons and powered by a V8 engine capable of 450 horse power, the Pombron's maker also claim the car is 'rocket grenade proof'.

Last year, a bottle retailed for $900,000. It is not a meant to be drunk, the company's website explains - instead it should be displayed as art. That's because the bling of the bottle frankly puts the SUV to shame.

'In the past our customers have included Lenin and his revolutionary partner Trotsky,' explains the Dartz spokesperson.

'In fact we are launching a version of this new model in 2012, just for Latin America.

According to the Dartz company's website, the flask, a replica of the radiator guard used for the Russo-Baltique cars, is made from gold coins minted between 1908 and 1912. This is around the time the company manufactured its first car. The flask cap is made from white and yellow gold

'This will commemorate the fact that Trotsky was killed in Mexico with an ice pick in 1940.

'As such, the Latin version will come with a gold ice axe to mark this fact.'

Behold, The BlackBerry* Watch: $150, Coming In February

Turns out those leaks about a BlackBerry Bluetooth companion watch were dead on: The Allerta InPulse Bluetooth companion watch—not a watchphone— isn't actually a RIM product, and should ship in February for $150. So what does it do?

Think of it as an extender for your BlackBerry, or a wrist-mounted dashboard. It won't place calls or composes texts; its really just there to give you a heads-up and preview whenever your BlackBerry mothership gets a call, receives a message, or has some other, being-a-BlackBerry-related news to share with you. Also, yes: It's a watch. It may not do a whole lot, but the hardware sounds nice, for what it's worth.

Allerta, which totally sounds like a prescription mood drug, says the watch'll last for four days on a single charge, which is respectable, considering that it doesn't look too hideously large. The InPulse will communicate with any BlackBerry running OS 4.3 or above by means of a free companion app. The watch, though, isn't quite as cheap: It'll ship for $150 in February, though it's available for preorder now.

Netflix Streaming On PS3: Coming Soon

Netflix streaming will be available "later this year" on the PS3. Like the Xbox 360, it'll be free with the $8.99-a-month plan. Unlike the 360, you'll enable Netflix via an "instant streaming Blu-ray disc."

Apparently, the free disc activates the Netflix mojo via BD-Live, in what must be the best use of BD-Live ever. At least until the next major system update, you'll have to load up the disc every time you want to use Netflix. But you'll be able to pick out movies or throw stuff into your queue using an onscreen interface, so there's no going back to the old-school days where you had to add stuff to your queue on your computer before strolling over to your Xbox and TV.

Pop on over to Netflix to reserve the disc now—I have a feeling there's gonna be a huge demand crush for them.

United Nations Approves MicroUSB Universal Phone Charger Standard

The International Telecommunication Union, a branch of the UN, has decided on a standard for phone chargers that should finally cut down on a huge chunk of unnecessary e-waste. It's about time.

It looks like the Universal Charging Solution (UCS) has some pretty broad support, from handset manufacturers like LG, Motorola and Samsung to carriers including AT&T and T-Mobile. No word on whether the standard will match the one the GSM Association has been working on, but they're both rallying around MicroUSB, so we'll call it likely for now.

What's sad to me is that, according to the source, this standard could save 51,000 tons of waste if it were in place today. Considering all phone chargers do exactly the same thing, it's pretty ridiculous there wasn't a standard in place before.

Participating carriers and handset makers should fully adopt the UCS by 2012. Hopefully America hops on board before then.

Homeless Man Bites Accused's Penis

A Taiwan man had to seek medical treatment after his genitals were bitten while forcing a homeless man to perform oral sex, a newspaper reported Tuesday.

The incident occurred about 3 am Monday in Daya Park in Taichung County, central Taiwan, the Apple Daily said.

Hou Chung-hsin, 31, who is homeless, was drunk and loitering in Taya Park when he saw a 60-year-old homeless man, identified only as Kuo, sleeping under a pavilion.

Hou woke up Kuo and asked for money. When Kuo refused to give him money, Hou knocked Kuo to the ground.

Kuo pulled himself up and walked into a toilet to urinate. Hou followed him into the toilet, grabbed Kuo's head and forced Kuo to perform oral sex on him, the paper said.

Kuo bit Hou's genitals, drawing blood and causing Hou flee for help to a police station about 50 metres away.

Police rushed Hou to Cheng Ching Hospital, where Dr Tsai Cheh-hung said that Hou's foreskin had several lacerations. He gave Hou a tetanus shot and treated his wounds. The functions of his penis were not damaged.

After police questioning, Hou was turned over for prosecution on sexual harassment charges.

Your Pubic Hairs Are Freaking Me Out

Voodoo Doughnut in Portland, Ore. submitted a racy ad to Bitch Magazine, which refused to run it. The magazine, a self-described "feminist response to pop culture," explained turning down the ad by stating, "We felt that our readers would feel that the ad goes against our mission statement to be anti-sexist."

Voodoo, where the menu includes Triple Chocolate Penetration and Ck-n-Balls, responded, "I thought Bitch would be happy the woman isn't plucked and shaved, but all natural like a real woman."

British Men Last Longer In Bed

Researchers in Holland measured the sexual performance of nearly 500 men from five countries against the clock. They found that British men had sex for 10 minutes on average before reaching an orgasm.

American men came second with an average performance of eight minutes, followed by the Dutch with a 6.5-minute innings. Spaniards were fourth, giving their lovers 4.9 minutes of pleasure, while Turks trailed in last, clocking up an average 4.4 minutes.

One man, whose nationality was not identified, lasted just six seconds, the study by experts at Utrecht University in the Netherlands found. However, another participant in the research put in an impressive 52-minute performance before peaking.

The study, published in the Journal of Sexual Medicine, was examining premature ejaculation. The condition is medically defined as the inability to last more than a minute.

Man Arrested For Being Naked In Own Kitchen

An American man who brewed coffee naked in his own kitchen is facing indecent exposure charges and could be jailed.

Eric Williamson, 29, from Virginia, insists he has done nothing wrong and any exposure of his private parts was purely accidental.

Williamson was making coffee in the buff at 5.30am when a woman and her seven-year-old son walked past his kitchen window in Springfield. The woman then called the police.

Fairfax County Police spokeswoman Mary Ann Jennings said the woman claimed Williamson then moved and exposed himself again through a large front window.

In his defense, Williamson said: "I'm by myself. So I come down here - the roommates are gone, and it's my house."

Trial lawyer Dickson Young, who is not connected with the case, explained that "in order for it to be a crime, they have to prove - the state and police - have to prove that he knew those people were there when he was standing there."

Shauna Sand Signed Off on Sex Tape

Model/actress Shauna Sand has dropped her lawsuit plans over an allegedly unauthorized sex tape... after Vivid Entertainment brought in a handwriting expert to analyze the signature on their contract. A video of Sand having sex with her current boyfriend is set to be released by the production company, and Shauna -- Lorenzo Lamas' ex -- apparently signed off on the project, TMZ reports.

"Yes I did make a sex tape with my boyfriend earlier this year. In fact I've made several sex tapes, but I certainly didn't sign off on this and Vivid has no right to put it out. I am trying to get a hold of my attorney now," she explained to TMZ earlier this month.

However, Vivid believes they have the right to release the tapes.

"We were approached by a third party, who brought us footage of Shauna having sex with her current boyfriend and we were immediately interested in acquiring it ... We're comfortable with our legal position in releasing this footage," founder Steven Hirsch told TMZ initially. After hiring the handwriting expert, Hirsch claims that Sand withdrew the cease and desist letter her lawyer sent Vivid.

Genesis Unveils 11th Annual 'Hot 100' List of Porn Stars

Genesis magazine on Tuesday announced plans to release the 11th annual edition of its "Porn's Hot 100" issue. The January 2010 issue has a free, inserted mini-mag that ranks the 100 hottest stars in the adult industry.

Genesis anointed Sasha Grey the No. 1 porn star in this year's rankings, thanks to her breakthrough year in both mainstream and adult.

The January issue of Genesis also includes an exclusive centerfold layout of Grey shot by photographer and filmmaker, Ian Cinnamon. With a penchant for the avant garde, Cinnamon is now sole documentarian for the experiences and exploits of his fiancé, Grey. He is also co-creative director (along with Grey) for her production company. His work will also appear alongside Grey's in her upcoming sexual philosophy book, due out in the early part of 2010.

The top 10 (in order) "Porn's Hot 100" also features Jenna Haze, Digital Playground star Jesse Jane, Tera Patrick, Wicked's Stormy Daniels, Adam & Eve's Bree Olson, Briana Banks, Belladonna, Joanna Angel and Gianna Michaels.

A complete list of the rankings is also available at genesisonline.com/hot100.

Banging Bitches Adam & Eve

Thank you Andre Madness for pulling together some of the hottest bitches for some banging all girl madness. I've never been one for all girl features, but I couldn't help but watch this a few times.

I lustfully desire the ladies from the first scene which are dark haired vixens Tory Lane and Angelina Valentine. These are the kind of mean bitches I like to take home and not let mom meet. They have some steamy hot oiled up sex in a dark and barely lit electrical room. It suits the mood well.

Best scene on this release is the next one. An unholy lick-a-thon with the trinity Kimberly Kane, Avy Scott and Sammie Rhodes. Have you ever seen a double penetration scene with three ladies and no guy. No. Well me neither till this arrive in the mail. This scene starts off well with one the girls tied and being whipped and kissed. Finally after a few whippings they untie they slave and began to ravage her. The strap ons come out and soon you get to see your first all girl DP scene.

There are three more scenes on this: Tori Black and Monique Alexander, Jana Jordan and Alyssa Reece and last Nikki Benz and JennyHendrix, with some extras included like bloopers, interviews, photo gallery and more.

I sadly didn't really get into the blonde duo scene with Jenny Hendrix and Nikki Benz. I rather have seen the blonde hotties Jana Jordan and Monique Alexander make out. Plus for some reason the scene with Jenny and Nikki is really lit up compared to the rest of the scene. I think they have a bit of the girl next door look, which really isn't my type. This DVD is called Banging Bitches and I didn't see any cat like attitude from them. I'll still be keeping this in my collection, plus it comes with a digital download copy so I can keep one at work. Trick or Thief: Bernie Madoff Halloween Masks Flying Off Shelves

Devils, sinners and swindlers, oh my!

You probably won't see anything quite as scary this Halloween as the thousands of masks of public enemy number one, Bernard Madoff.

Madoff, who's not exactly UNICEF's best friend, made off with investors' billions in a terrifying true-life Ponzi scheme that ultimately landed him behind bars with a 150-year prison term.

After covering up the scam for decades, now the trick is definitely on him -- Madoff masks are top sellers in stores and on costume-dealing Web sites.

One firm that makes a rubber Madoff mask, Rubie's Costume Company, has distributed more than 15,000 of them to stores across the U.S.

While the new "King Con" is doing big business this Halloween season, Rubie's exec Howard Beige predicts that Bernie Madoff still won't be the top seller this year. That distinction, he says, will go to the original "Thriller," Michael Jackson.

20,000 Try For Thriller Dance Record

Dancers from Vancouver to Beijing to Buenos Aires attempted to make their mark in the Guinness Book of World Records for the largest number of people dancing simultaneously to Michael Jackson's Thriller.

It's estimated about 20,000 people in more than 200 locations in 37 countries around the world participated in the dance which occurred Saturday night or Sunday morning depending on where you were.

Dance co-ordinator Graeme Lea led the crowd -- all of whom had brought food and money donations for the city's food bank in order to participate in the event.

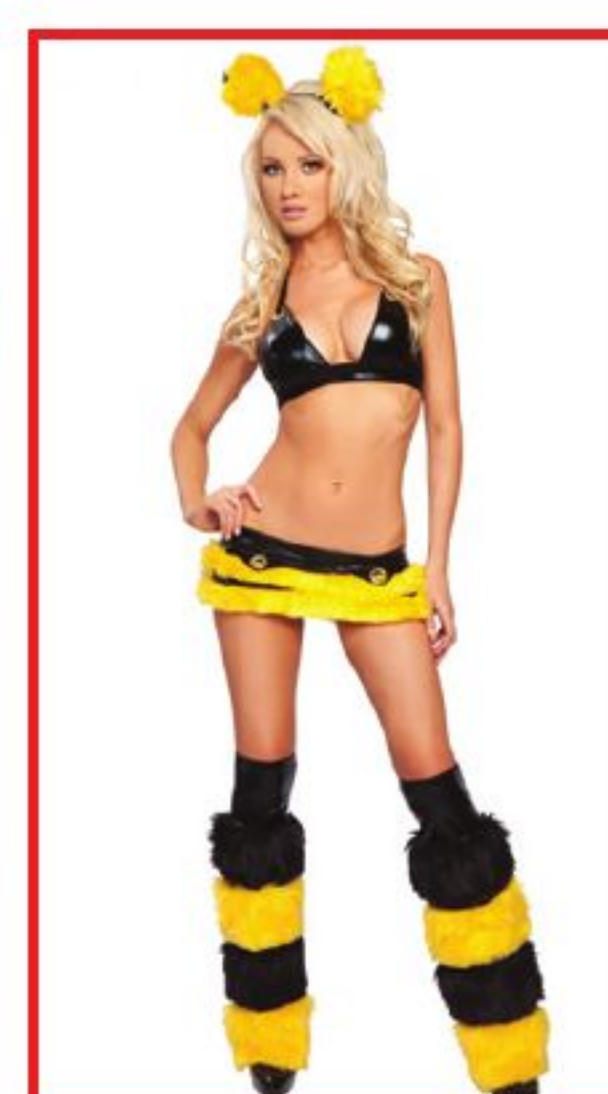

"When we take our first step, people in China will take their first step," said Lea. The dance around the world was co-ordinated by cellphone so all the dancers could begin at the same time.

In Los Angeles, a massive crowd of more than 4,000 made-up dancers gathered at the Nokia Center to do their bit.

Organizers hope their efforts will top the previous record which was set on Aug. 29 in Mexico City when 13,597 shimmied to Thriller on what would have been the King of Pop's 51st birthday.

Halloween may conjure up visions of shrieking kids in princess and skeleton costumes trick-or-treating door to door. But this popular holiday increasingly has morphed into a celebration by adults who buy a Dracula or sexy showgirl outfit and head to a party or club.

The shift has accelerated over the past five to 10 years, ushering in a transformation in the Halloween industry, according to retail industry analysts and executives.

More costume sales are going to adults, with some retailers saying the percentage of adult sales exceeds 50 percent. Nightclubs, restaurants and bars are throwing more Halloween parties and events.

Beer and booze companies are cashing in, too, unveiling Halloween ad campaigns and drinks, such as a Pumpkin Pie Martini from Blue Ice Vodka. And this year, with Halloween falling on a Saturday, some parties will last two days.

Halloween generates up to $6 billion in retail sales, according to various estimates, helping to boost revenues just before the industry's crucial holiday season begins in earnest.

This year retailers will be watching nervously to see whether the long economic downturn bites into sales or whether shoppers decide instead to splurge on a weekend of frivolity.

Industry research firm IBISWorld predicts Halloween-related sales will climb 4.2 percent over last year to a record $6 billion as the budding economic recovery spurs consumers to "escape their recessionary woes."

Partying Adults Make Halloween Big Business

The National Retail Federation is more upbeat, saying a wobbly economy "has caught up to Halloween." Still, the group expects Americans to spend $4.75 billion on costumes, candy, decorations and cards, down about 18 percent from last year's projection of $5.77 billion. Consumers, on average, are projected to spend $56.31, down from $66.54 in 2008, according to a survey done for the industry group.

The under-35 crowd is the key demographic for Halloween, with more than 80 percent of adults 18 to 34 surveyed saying they expect to spend money on costumes, whether for themselves, their children or their pets.

"Spending among young adults without children has increased dramatically over the last five years," said NRF Vice President Ellen Davis. "Today's young adults celebrated Halloween vigorously as children. They're not ready to relinquish that fun."

Costumes account for the biggest chunk of the spending — about $1.75 billion, according to the NRF, followed closely by candy and decorations. About $250 million is spent on Halloween greeting cards. Retailers report popular adult costumes this year include:

*Michael Jackson, following the pop superstar's death this year

*Zombies, inspired by Michael Jackson's hit "Thriller" as well as the movie "Zombieland"

*Vampires, spurred by the young adult "Twilight" books and HBO's "True Blood" series

*Sexy Queen of Hearts, nurse and burlesque babe outfits

Across the nation, nightclubs, restaurants, and bars are mixing Halloween drinks, decorating their walls with skeletons and skulls, and sponsoring adult costume contests.

"It's exploded in the last couple of years," said Tony Fleith, who organizes a month of Halloween-related festivities at the Barker Lounge, a popular gay and lesbian bar in Denver. "It's gone beyond ghosts and pumpkins."

Fleith has decorated the bar by hanging skeletons and other spooky paraphernalia. A ghoul can be seen crashing through the ceiling. The cult movie classic "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" is shown every Thursday in October at midnight. Special drinks such as a tequila concoction called the "Grave Digger" are served. The festivities culminate with a Monster Ball on Halloween night.

In Chicago, The Underground nightclub is throwing two days of parties. On Halloween night, it's a "blood-feeding" theme where guests are invited to dress up in costumes inspired by vampire-related books and movies such as "Dracula" and "Interview with the Vampire." On Sunday, the club will become a "hauntingly inspired setting of skeletons, skulls, spirits and specters."

Beer and liquor companies, too, are active in Halloween promotions.

Jägermeister is sponsoring a float in New York's Village Halloween Parade and hosting a Halloween party in the Big Apple. MillerCoors — the Coors Brewing and Miller Brewing joint venture — once again has rolled out an in-store, vampire-inspired promotion for Miller Lite, this year encouraging beer drinkers to "Sink Your Fangs Into Great Taste."

Stephen Stanley, president of Disguise Inc., a California company that supplies costumes to Wal-Mart, Target and other retailers, said the rise of temporary Halloween stores over the past decade has contributed to the adult participation.

Typically, the temporary stores open once the operator secures a temporary lease of, say, 60 or 90 days on a vacant property. New Jersey-based Party City, the nation's largest party-goods retail chain, said last month it had opened 15 temporary Halloween stores under the name "Halloween Costume Warehouse." The doors will stay open through early November.

So while this year's Halloween will see plenty of young kids trick-or-treating, it also will feature many party-loving adults who remain young at heart. "We're very fond of saying Halloween is not just for kids anymore," said Davis of the National Retail Federation.

IT'S HARD TO FIND A GOOD DONKEY SHOW

The Weekly Adventures Of OJ Tobias

I found two eight balls in my dry cleaning. I was wondering where I had left them. I think I picked them up about a year ago.

But Papa's getting a bit older these days, so after doing one of them, I decided the responsible thing to do was sell the other one. Plus, I was paranoid as hell. I went through a mental list:

- A. Who would enjoy this fantastic blow?
- B. Who would actually answer my call?
- C. Who had some cash?

My editor Bill don't party. He's out. My stalker Colleen always wants me to pay for my column space. Fk THAT! No need to contact her since the arrest. She's out. All my brothers are locked up and my Mom would not ask them if they wanted it during her visitation. What happened to family looking out for one another? It is probably for the best considering they don't have no money.

I was having trouble finding someone to buy all this cocaine. After doing the half of the other eight ball, I decided enough was enough. I thought I should just unload this shit as soon as possible.

So I jumped in the car and headed to Bill's house to ask him where I can find some fat chicks. He likes them healthy. On my way, I picked up a copy of last weeks Metro.

I was immediately pissed. Well, not immediately but as soon as I found a bum to read the paper for me, I was pissed. I sent in an awesome fking column last week and it was not even in the goddamn paper!

So Bill was out again. Mainly because the bum was a crackhead and wanted it in exchange for his reading services. Fking crack heads... now how to make a deal...?

I called Bill.

"WHAT THE FK?" I screamed into the phone.

Bill responded like always. As soon as he picked up, he said, "This is Gil, I am away from my phone. Please leave a message." I guess he is a big drinker, How else do you keep fking up your name? But I was not letting Bill get off with this shit.

"Bill, you fker, I sent you a copy of my last thirty-seven Facebook, Myspace and Twitter updates, not to mention the seventy-three stick figure drawings I did to compete with that new cartoon dude. Speaking of that new cartoon dude, you tell that Big Dick Hunter he will never make it in the cartoon business... not with me around! I went to WalMart and bought a shitload of erasers." I paused to await Bill's reply, but he just handed the phone to his assistant.

"If you would like to hear your message, press 1. If you would like to re-record, press 2." She is creepy. So I just hung up. I just hope Bill understands how much work I have been doing lately.

I gotta go to the liquor store.

Did I Ever Tell You The One About... And other strange oddities of the world

Man Pleads Guilty To DWI In Motorized La-Z-Boy

A Minnesota man has pleaded guilty to driving his motorized La-Z-Boy chair while drunk.

A criminal complaint says 62-year-old Dennis LeRoy Anderson told police he left a bar in the northern Minnesota town of Proctor on his chair after drinking eight or nine beers.

Prosecutors say Anderson's blood alcohol content was 0.29, more than three times the legal limit, when he crashed into a parked vehicle in August 2008. He was not seriously injured.

Police said the chair was powered by a converted lawnmower and had a stereo and cup holders.

Sixth Judicial District Judge Heather Sweetland stayed 180 days of jail time Monday and ordered two years of probation for Anderson.

9 Lives Per Gallon? Cat Stuck In SUV Engine Is OK

A cat who rode two miles through New York City while stuck in the engine compartment of an SUV has lived to meow about it. Wilfred Rodriguez heard rattling while he was driving Monday in the Bronx. After he parked, he spotted a bushy tail and a paw sticking out of the SUV's front end.

His initial reaction: "Oh my God! I killed a cat." He was relieved when the paw moved.

Detectives with the New York Police Department's Emergency Service Unit freed the grease-covered kitty by removing the SUV's battery and other vehicle parts.

Richard Gentles of New York City Animal Care & Control says the tan-and-white stray appears to be in good physical shape.

Cops Lose 2-Gram Bag Of Cocaine Used To Train Dogs

Police in Naples are on the lookout for cocaine. Somehow, they lost their stash. A 2-gram packet was discovered missing this summer from a narcotics kit used in training. Two officers lost it in April, but they're unsure where. It could've been the police parking lot or an airport rental car, but the likely spot was a hotel.

The veteran pair checked out the kit to train their police dogs, but the one who usually handles the drugs was called to a scene. By the time she returned, the dogs were energetic and destroying the room.

The officers said they were focusing more on straightening up the hotel room than collecting the drugs, so the bag probably got left (or maybe the dogs liked the way it smelled too much.-Ed).

They weren't reprimanded — supervisors say it was an honest mistake.

Man Stuffs Mouth With 16 Cockroaches In Record Bid

A Michigan pet store employee got himself a mouthful of cockroaches — on purpose. The Lansing State Journal reported Sean Murphy on Friday stuffed 16

Madagascar hissing cockroaches into his mouth. He was trying to set a new Guinness World Records mark and said the old record was 11.

Murphy initially got 12 squirming cockroaches into his mouth, but then kept adding them until he got to 16. He says it was a "big surprise" since he's never fit that many in his mouth before "in one try."

The employee of Preuss Pets in Lansing says each cockroach was at least 2 1/2 inches long. Murphy says he might try for 20 next year. A video of the feat was posted on the newspaper's Web site.

Man Ordering Food Called A Zombie, Punched Twice

Iowa City police are investigating an early morning assault in which a man accused another of being a zombie, then punched him twice. Police said the assault occurred at 1:17 a.m. Sunday at an Iowa City restaurant south of the University of Iowa campus.

A man was ordering food when he was approached by another man who called him a zombie, then hit him in the eye. When the victim tried to call police on his cell phone, the man punched him again, breaking his nose. The man then ran out a back door.

Norway Snake Smuggler Nabbed In Skin-Crawling Bust

A man has been arrested in Norway trying to smuggle two dozen snakes and geckos into the country by hiding them under his clothes.

Customs agent Helge Breilid said Monday the 22-year-old Norwegian citizen was apprehended in the southern town of Kristiansand after getting off a ferry from Hirtshals, Denmark. He said the man had 14 royal pythons and 10 albino leopard geckos under his clothes.

Breilid said the non-venomous snakes — the smallest species in the python family — were hidden in stockings duct-taped to the man's abdomen. The geckos were in boxes taped to his thighs.

Customs officials found the reptiles, which are not endangered, Sunday during a search following the discovery of a tarantula in one of the man's bags.

Woman Flashes $27,000 At Mass. Bar, Gets Robbed

Massachusetts police say they are searching for two men suspected of robbing a woman of $27,000 after she flashed the cash in a Springfield bar. Sgt. John Delaney said on Friday that the 22-year-old woman was robbed Monday night by two men wearing dark clothing and bandanas, one armed with what appeared to be a semiautomatic handgun.

According to police, the woman bragged in the bar of receiving the $27,000 from an insurance claim. Police say she was later robbed after she left the bar with a male friend.

Delaney said the woman should have put her cash settlement in a bank.

Senior Chief Out After Claims Of Degrading Gay Sailors

The Navy is forcing the retirement of the chief petty officer charged with allegations of degrading gay and lesbian sailors under his command in Bahrain, The Associated Press reported.

Chief Petty Officer Michael Toussaint will lose his current position and forced to retire, the Navy announced Wednesday. His retirement pay could also be significantly affected.

The Navy's reopening of its investigation into the allegations of abuse was prompted by a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Navy by Pennsylvania Representative Joe Sestak last month. Sestak requested an inquiry into the abuse of Petty Officer Third Class Joseph Christopher Rocha, who served under Toussaint.

Rocha was discharged from the Navy in 2007 after he violated the military's ban on openly gay service, known as "don't ask, don't tell," and came out to his commanding officer after suffering two years of abuse from shipmates while on duty on the island of Bahrain between 2004 and 2006.

The former sailor alleges service members engaged in a two-year pattern of abuse against him after they began to suspect he is gay. "I was hog-tied to a chair, rolled around the base, left in a dog kennel that had feces spread in it," Rocha told Youth Radio.

The atmosphere on the island base was "degrading" to gay men and lesbians, he says. "The fact that I was starting to figure out that I was a homosexual, it was the most degrading thing I've ever experienced in my life," Rocha said.

The hazing, taunting, and bullying began soon after Rocha declined to take a female prostitute in 2004. Because he feared losing his job, Rocha says he did not report the abuse, including violence he suffered at the hands of Toussaint.

Documents acquired by Youth Radio via a Freedom of Information Act request show that Rocha was not alone in his suffering. A summary of an independent investigation concluded in 2007 lists 93 abusive incidents, including forcing two female sailors to simulate lesbian sex on video. One of the women has since committed suicide.

"The Navy's actions in reviewing Joseph Rocha's case show how important accountability is in the chain of command," said Dr. Aaron Belkin, director of the Palm Center, a think tank that advocates for repeal of "don't ask, don't tell," in a statement.

US Marshal Pick Was Already Gay Rights Pioneer

As a little-known Minneapolis police sergeant, Sharon Lubinski made headlines when she declared she was a lesbian on the front pages of the city's largest newspaper – a bold move that other gay officers say inspired them to come out, too.

More than a decade later, Lubinski could become the first openly gay U.S. marshal after President Barack Obama nominated the 57-year-old assistant police chief to one of the country's top law enforcement jobs last week.

Though some gay rights activists have criticized the nomination as nothing more than a symbolic gesture from a president they say has lagged behind on key gay issues, others note the move is a step in the right direction toward ending a culture of discrimination.

Back when Lubinski declared in a 1993 Minneapolis Star Tribune interview that she was a lesbian, she told the newspaper she feared she was putting her safety, career and personal life in danger. At the time, officers in the department suspected of being gay endured taunts, jokes and whispers. One officer who suspected she was gay even called her "sicko" behind her back, she told the paper.

But the risk was worth it, she said. Police officers who handle gay crime victims must be able to accept gay colleagues, and though the atmosphere inside the department was improving, more needed to be done, she told the newspaper.

The front-page story left a lasting impression. Afterward, other gay officers said they felt emboldened to follow her lead.

"Frankly, I would not have been comfortable being the first to come out, but I think she made it far easier for the rest of us because everyone said, 'Oh, she's a good cop,'" said Minneapolis Deputy Chief Robert Allen, who revealed that he was gay to fellow officers a few weeks after Lubinski.

Lubinski declined to be interviewed for this story, citing a desire for discretion before Senate hearings on her appointment. U.S. Sen. Amy Klobuchar, D-Minn., who recommended Lubinski for the job, said Wednesday she did so because of Lubinski's leadership and her respect from fellow officers – not her sexual orientation.

Obama Secretly Supports Gay Marriage, New Poll Finds

An Internet poll conducted by U.S. News & World Report finds that people polled believe that President Obama secretly supports gay marriage despite statements to the contrary.

The unscientific poll asks readers: "President Obama says he doesn't support same-sex marriage, but some of his supporters and opponents suspect otherwise. What do you think?"

A large majority (72%) said they believe Obama secretly supports gay marriage.

The poll's distinctively religious audience, however, make its results a bit suspect. It is hosted by Dan Gilgoff at the magazine's God & Country blog. The poll's phrasing "opponents suspect otherwise" could lead readers to answer yes because they sense Obama is being disingenuous and politically coy, not necessarily that he is a gay rights champion.

One commenter, Shaun, said: "Even if he does something actively to support gay rights, doesn't mean that he is in support per se. He may pass bills and laws, remove old ones, but that does not mean he supports gay rights, but rather proves that he is doing stuff to keep the LGBT community happy."
